

Get Critical Value Alerts Straight to Your Email

Nursing and administrative staff can now have fully HIPAA-compliant email notifications set up to alert them of when results containing critical or abnormal values have posted to the Aculabs online order web portal.

Critical Notifications Update

In an effort to improve communication between Aculabs and the facilities we service, Aculabs is redesigning our Critical Notification System/Methodology. The first step in this process is to incorporate email notifications to nursing administration.

By doing so, your administration team will now be able to receive a digital notification of the residents whose results produced critical values. Having this information can be used to focus attention and make sure that patient needs are addressed timely.

Next Step – Email Designation

Upon your approval, Aculabs will need the email address of your facility's Director of Nursing. This will be put into our Laboratory Interface System, where then the critical value parameters will be set. Once a critical value has been realized, the system will send out an email.

The email notification is HIPAA-compliant and includes a unique access number specific to the patient with the critical value. By logging into the Aculabs Web Portal, and referencing the unique number, your staff will know which patients require special consideration.
